Legionella Risk Management

In line with Health and Safety publication - Legionnaires' disease: The control of Legionella bacteria in water systems (L8) it is a legal requirement for an employer, or a person in control of the premises, to take the right precautions to reduce the risks of exposure to Legionella.

According to the HSE the risk assessment should include:

- management responsibilities, including the name of the competent person and a description of your system
- competence and training of key personnel
- any identified potential risk sources
- any means of preventing the risk or controls in place to control risks
- monitoring, inspection and maintenance procedures
- records of the monitoring results and inspection and checks carried out
- arrangements to review the risk assessment regularly, particularly when there is reason to suspect it is no longer valid

Due to the cost of accidents, litigation and negative publicity for non-compliant organisations; it is not only a legal requirement, but it makes good business sense for the employer to manage Legionella within that particular business undertaking. The aim of QTS UK Ltd is to provide the client with high value products and services which are both meaningful to the organisation and legally compliant. Our Legionella risk management plans will undoubtedly assist with creating a more positive culture for your organisation.

Every year safety regulations become more complex and it is difficult for companies to keep up-to-date with the latest legislation. Effective management is the key to protect you and your company from accidents, litigation and bad-publicity, etc. QTS UK Ltd have experienced fire safety professionals who strive to provide cost effective solutions to problems faced by our customers. Our legionella risk management systems are designed to be simple for the customer to follow, as we realise that you have a business to run and do not want to be tied up with complicated and unnecessary paperwork.

QTS UK Ltd provides Legionella services that are both legally compliant and meaningful to your organisation. We can assist you with the formation and review of your fire safety documentation, undertake and support you with your Legionella risk assessment, provide Legionella awareness training and undertake audits to benchmark your company's progress.
